Victorian buildings still surround Londoners, so we are under the impression we know the Victorian city and how it functioned. But just as Flanders' The Victorian House revealed the long-lost daily routines of the Victorian home, so now she describes the comings and goings of the world's largest city. Calling on the magical eye of Charles Dickens, possibly the greatest 'look-er' the city has ever seen, Flanders takes her readers down the teeming city streets of the 19th century ...
